

There are days in the life of a child, when he is bored. It was Maths and our „hero” stared at the blackboard, with a bored look. In the next moment some letters started glowing. He looked around, but everybody had a bored face. He looked again on the letters. They said K-E-C-S-K-E-M-É-T-A-R-C-H-I-V-E-S Kecskemét allright, it is the city where our „hero” lives, where he learns, where he looks at the blackboard... but he was never before in the archives. Can children get in there? If yes, what is he going to say? What is he looking for?

He decided he has to tell it to his big brother. Especially, that he can drive dad's car – Kecskemét is too large for Lego-children to go anywhere. The city hall and the archives - big breath: hopefully they let me in.

They are inside of the archives. They were waiting for them. An employee gave them a map to copy it, he helped them to climb on the shelf, take the map, and clean it. Very old documents are kept here from the city's past!

Studying the old map and listening to the advices of the archives employee, they noticed some interesting signs. The sights of the city are marked – however, as the map has been drawn, some of the museums weren't there. Hm, that is a mystery, but let us look for the way.

Outside, they looked at the map in the sunshine, and then they noticed that someone has drawn an thin line on the map. Or not a line: an arrow! The arrow pointed on the church, in front of the archives.

No need for the car! They ran to the old monastery church. Like always they heard beautiful music coming from inside of the monastery, because there is the institute for musical education.

In the church was silence, deep silence. A restaurator was measuring the statues in there, but as he saw the Lego-children, he ran to them and gave them a small statue. „I knew you are coming! Here take this. I copied a statue for you. I have chosen it from 300 others!”

Outside on the sunshine they examined the statue and they noticed that there is an old crest of Kecskemét on the bottom of the statue. They asked the restaurator who's statue did he gave them.

„You have to answer this question! If I remember correctly, there is a painting of him in the gallery!” Our friends have started to look for the gallery in the small and old streets of Kecskemét. This gallery presents Kecskemét's famous birth: János Bozsó's works and collections

After they found it, they went in and looked at the pictures, and under one picture they found a small text telling them to go on the first floor to the biggest clock in the clock collection. The collection can be visited thanks to the famous watchmaker dynasty of the city.

At the front of the big clock there was a small text, which can only be read by a Lego-child, what told them to find the 14th picture, because on that is the sculpturer of the statue.

After a small search they found the picture. Near there there was an old artist smiling at them. „I waited for a long time for you! I copied the picture and now I give it to you!”

Then he said: „A long time ago the building was a synagog, there you can find the copys of Michelangelo’s statues. They are worth to see them!” The children got into the car and drove out of the small and curved street to the carefully planned main square, in front of the a synagogue reflecting the Moorish and romantic signs.

In the synagog there are always interesting exhibitions – but now they were there because of what the old man said. On the monumental David-statue they found a small old text.

They weren't even surprised when a stranger gave them the copy of the head of David to them and then he ran away. The both Lego-children took the tiny statue-head and continued their journey.

On the shoulder of the statue-head they found a worn etiquette with a quite blurred inscription. Only two words could be read: library, dragon. Dragons in the library? The librarians aren't dragons, and animals can't go inside... Anyway, if we have to go there, let's go!

The children went in, they know every bookshelf – maybe there is the dragon. A librarian laughed after they question. „Maybe you are looking for a book about dragons?”

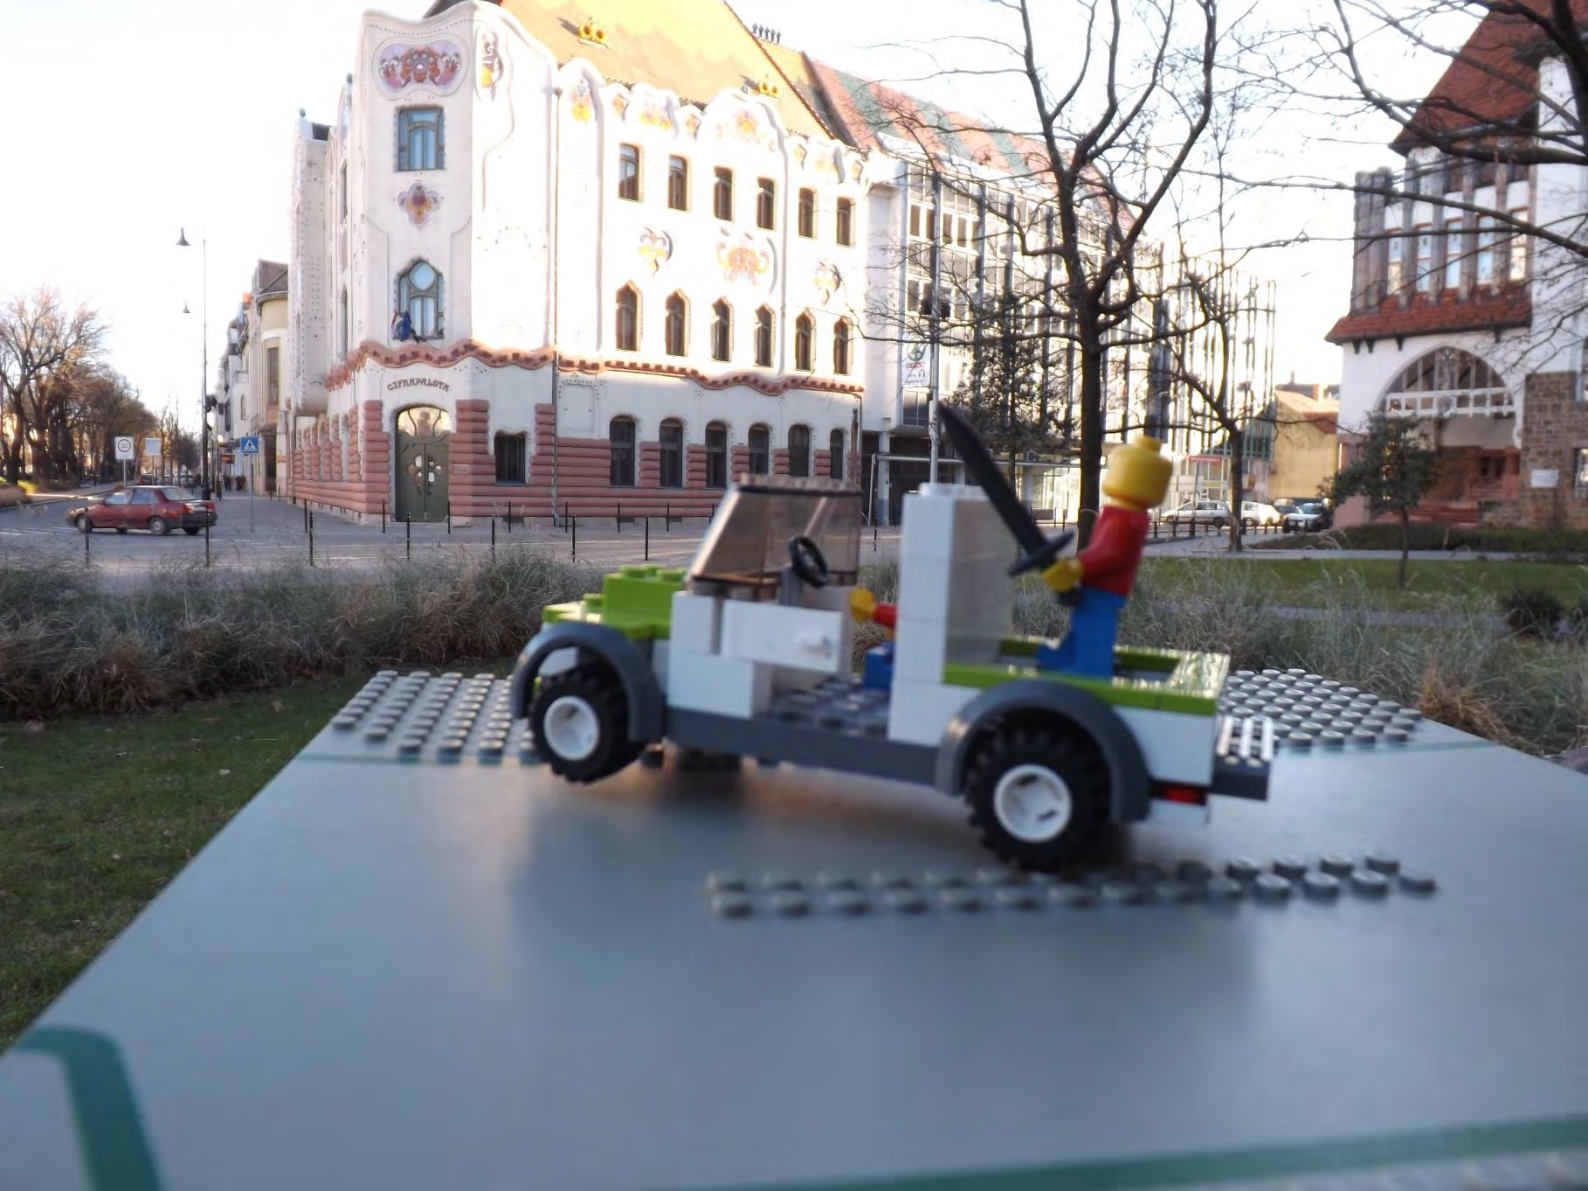

Both of the children's face turned red like their T-shirts. They borrowed the copy of the book, because they couldn't get the original one.

After they sat in the car they started to read the book. The book was from the 6-8th century, so the boys went to the „avarian treasure” exhibition.

They looked at the treasures, and they saw a very nice sword. It called them, they stared on it and they hardly managed to come out of the room. Outside a stranger gave them a copy of the sword. „I saw you liked the sword. I want to give you this copy!” After he gave it to them he disappeared.

The avarian sword looked like someone would have made this for them. It totally fit in their hands. They looked at the map, and they noticed a new arrow beginning exactly on the spot they were standing, it pointed on the music instrument collection of Kecskemét.

Our heroes remembered on a History lesson where they learned that the „avarians” liked to play on instruments, so they went to the instrument collection. It is one of the coolest museums of Kecskemet – maybe they can find a new trace.

After they arrived they saw that there are lots of different instrument. They didn't know which one is the one they are looking for. Who would believe them, that they are travelling after mysterious arrows which are appearing on an old city map!

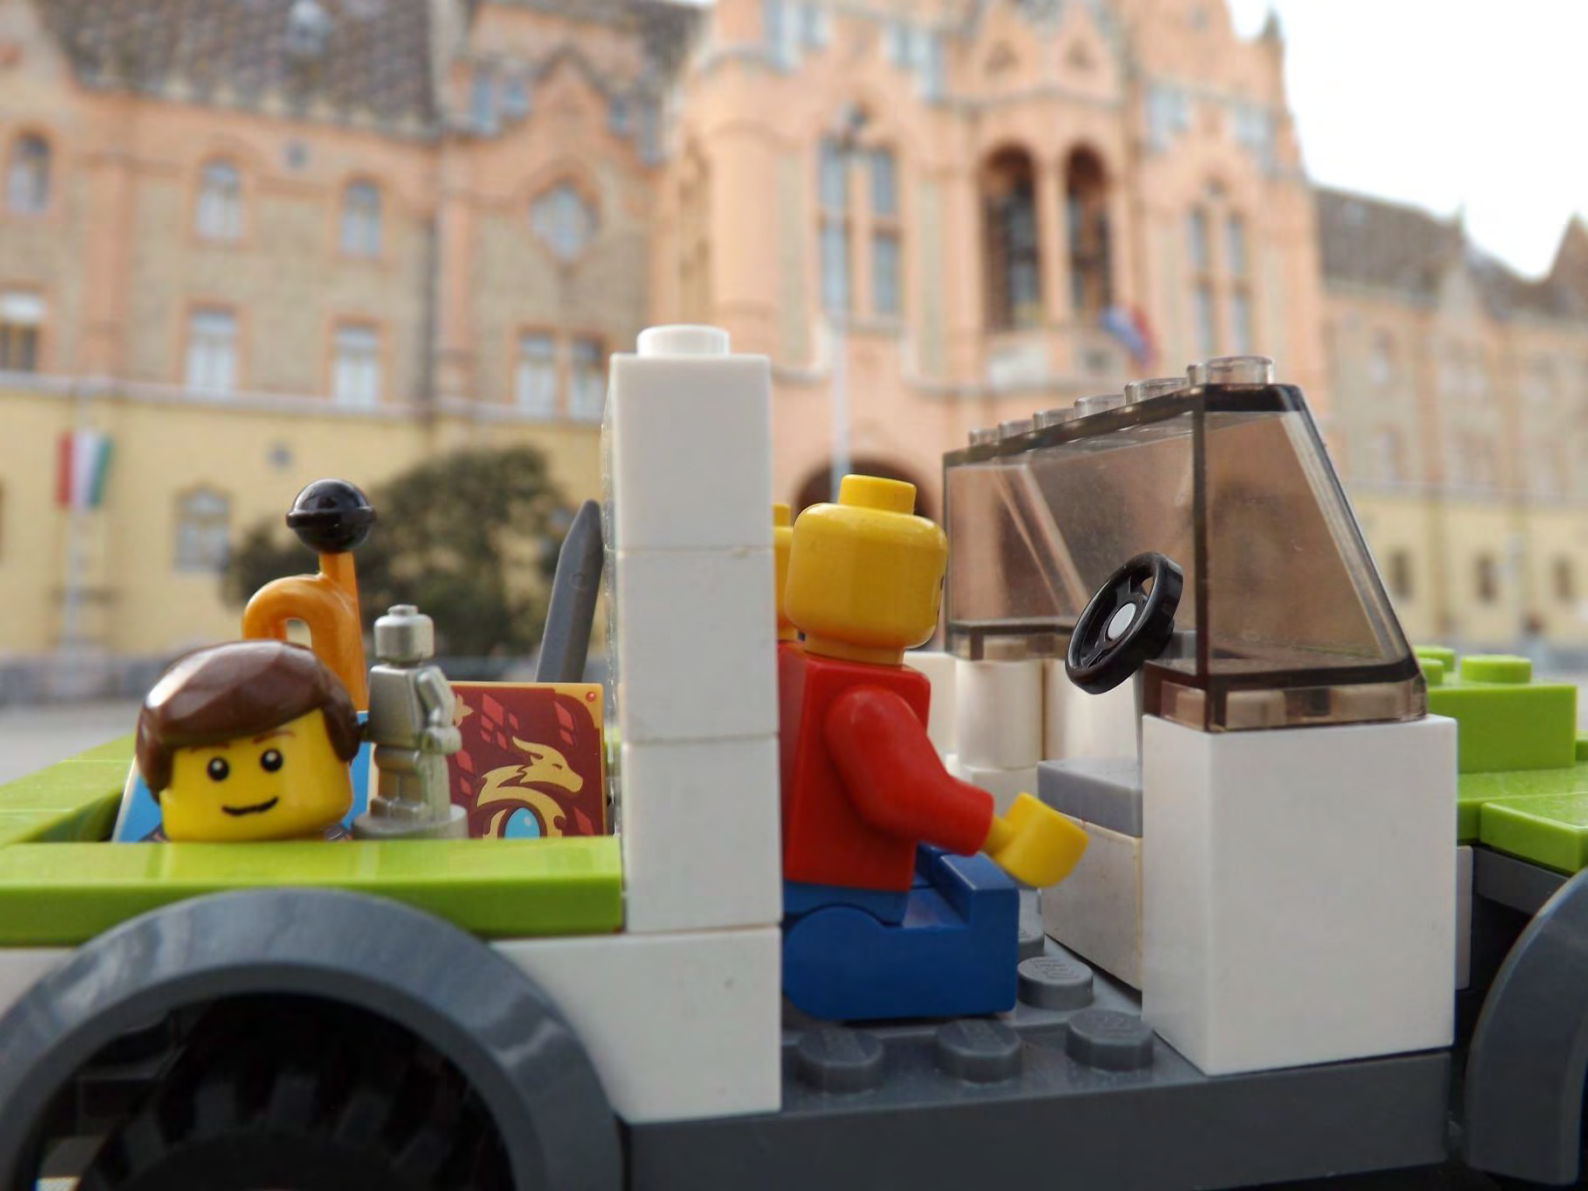

The exhibition is great, you can try all of the instruments. They asked an employee and she gave them a small trumpet. „Are you looking for this one right? I got the task to make a small copy of it for you.”

In the loud city nobody noticed that our heroes played their small trumpet. After one made a sound with it the other made another.

They looked at the map. They noticed another arrow pointing on the archives. They jumped into the car and went there. After they got in the building an employee smiled at them and said: „So you got everywhere on the map, right? I'll give you a reward!”

...Sweets are handy for small Lego-children too!
